Description:

The most influential factor determining the taste of a particular wine is still the grape variety or blend of varieties from which it is made. In this book, Oz Clarke and co-author Margaret Rand cover the 300 or so varieties that really matter, either because they are widely grown in the major wine regions of the world or because they are important ingredients of classic wines. Also included are 17 extended features on the classic grape varieties. Illustrated throughout with photographs and maps, these special features give the reader an insight into the methods used to maximize each grape's potential and an appreciation of the people behind the production of the world's finest wines. An introductory section, All About Grapes, explores the history of the vine, shows where grapes are grown today and provides information on what happens in modern vineyards and wineries.

One goes to Oz Clark for his eccentric, but always spot-on wine descriptions. I read it cover to cover ... its that engaging! I love the organization (three classes of descriptions depending on popularity of the grape). It makes a great companion to his Wine Atlas which focuses on wine growing regions while this one focuses on the grapes. He is a little dismissive of some of my favorites (e.g. Paso Robles Grenache, domestic Tannat and Riesling) but the book is a few years old and he may have a different opinion if he were to revisit. But I quibble ... thoroughly enjoyed it!
