Description:

Describes how a school bus carrying twenty children became stranded during a blizzard in Towner, Colorado, in 1931.

This tragedy happened before I was born. But I was raised in Kit Carson, Colorado, not all that far from Towner. I well remember the blue northerners that raged across the flat lands of of southeastern Colorado & Kansas. I don't ever remember hearing about this in my youth. But I now understand why we were taken home early when it started to snow. That blue storm cloud coming in was the first warning to get the kids back to the ranches, the chores done & get in the house. We could be stranded for days with out power. Propane tank was never allowed to get very low before a delivery arrived. I remember my dad having to shovel his way out of the dinning room window one time to get out of the house to go to the barn. Hard times in the 50's & 60's. LJC
